Ennalls Outlet Farm
Salem
c. 1770-80
Private

The eighteenth-century house on the Gore farm, comprised of part of the Ennalls Outlet tract, is one of the few gambrel roofed houses surviving in Dorchester County, and it figure prominently in the history of Methodism for the lower Shore. Thoroughly remodeled during the mid twentieth century, the house retains its historic roof shape.\

The land known as "Ennalls Outlett" was owned by Bartholomew Ennalls, Jr. (1746-1804) during the late eighteenth. Ennalls was a well-known convert to the Methodist faith following the American Revolution, and he was visited by the denomination's leading light, Reverend Francis Asbury, during his years itinerant ministry. In November 1786, Asbury entered in his journal, "I road to Bartholomew Ennalls; the notice was short, and the congregation small, the word, nevertheless, reached some hearts." A meeting house was built later on the south edge of the plantation, which was succeeded by a new larger Greek Revival building in 1855-56. (See D-202)

Bartholomew Ennalls was married twice, first to Sally Hooper in 1789, and secondly, to Nancy Keene Erwin ten years later in 1799. His daughter by his second marriage, Susan Ann Ennalls (1804-1863) inherited the Ennalls Outlet plantation from her father. She married twice as well, first to George W. Stephens, and secondly to Nathaniel Greene on January 8, 1828. For part of the nineteenth century, the plantation was known variously as the Greene farm or the Salem farm. For the next several decades after Susan Greene's death in 1863, the property was held in partnership of Charles W. Phillips and DeWitt C. Handley, who are designated at this location on the Lake, Griffing, and Stevenon atlas printed in 1877. The farm passed through several hands until it was acquired by Edgar S. Gore in October 1912.

DESCRIPTION SUMMARY

Known variously throughout the past two-hundred and fifty years as "Ennall's Outlet, Bartholomew Ennalls' Plantation, the Salem Farm, Greene Farm or more recently, the Gore Farm, this eighteenth century story-and-a-half brick-ended frame house is located at 4145 Salem Road in the village of Salem, Dorchester County, Maryland. The house faces north with the principal roof oriented on an east/west axis. Estimated to date to the fourth quarter of the eighteenth century, the gambrel roofed, double-pile dwelling is sheathed entirely with aluminum siding, and the roof is covered with asphalt shingles. Attached to each end are single-story hip roofed additions dating from the mid twentieth century.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION

The Gore farm, as it has been known since the mid twentieth century, is improved by a late eighteenth century, brick-ended, frame house distinctive for its gambrel roof. Photographed by E. H. Pickering for the Historic American Building Survey in December 1936, the three-bay by two-bay structure was originally built with a brick pier foundation, which is now infilled. The eighteenth century house has been entirely sheathed with aluminum siding, and the gambrel roofed is covered with asphalt shingles.

The north and south elevations are similar with central entrances flanked by single pane sash windows. The doors have been replaced in the twentieth century. The gambrel roof is marked by three evenly spaced shed roofed dormers filled with single-pane sash as well. The original brick ends have been covered with aluminum, and single story hip roofed additions extend the eighteenth century to each side. The west side addition is a enclosed porch, whereas the east end room is fully enclosed. Rising through the east end is an interior end brick chimney stack of historic brick, whereas the west end stack has been rebuilt above the roofline.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Green Farms is important as one of three existing Dorchester County gambrel roof dwellings. It was sufficiently important to include in the Historic American Building Survey of 1936.

Moreover, it was the home of Judge Henry Ennalls, who built it in the 1770's (Flowers) and was called, "Ennalls Outlett".
